To all attendees,

First, Bell Textron would like to thank you again for your time and participation in learning more about our company and the projects/programs we are working on. While I realize there were numerous technical glitches during the presentation, hopefully you at least left with a basic understanding of what Bell is looking for and some of the requirements involved in becoming a supplier to Bell.

For those businesses that are interested, the first step is submitting a request through our external webpage at <https://www.bellflight.com/suppliers>. We are eager to learn more about your capabilities and interest.

In addition, to ensure a streamlined evaluation process, after submitting your information via our website we request that you submit any supporting briefs, presentations, or other company materials to myself and George Kaszynski, Manager of Strategic Sourcing (817-280-6281, gkaszynski@bellflight.com). This way, Bell can do a more expeditious review and provide specific feedback regarding next steps and further evaluate opportunities for individual company engagement.

To reiterate, Bell is interested in both production and non-production suppliers as part of our supplier growth strategy to support Future Vertical Lift (FVL), innovation/rapid prototyping, and existing production models.

We appreciate your interest in Bell. Don't hesitate to contact us for questions or concerns.

Sincerely,

Jonah Roach
